INDUSTRY NEWS

4th DCA Affirms Mental Healthcare Providers Owe No Legal Duty to Warn Unidentifiable Potential Victims

Fourth DCA joined the majority of its sister courts in finding that mental health providers owe no legal duty to warn their patients' potential victims because "the unpredictable nature of . . . mental health patient[s'] future behavior" makes it nearly impossible for mental health care providers to foresee potential harm against others, control the risk, and identify individual potential victims, the elements one must satisfy to establish a legal duty.

Learning Leadership: Why a Little "Disease" Might Do Us Some Good

Dis-ease. Uncomfortable. If this leadership thing starts to seem easy, we should get suspicious. If we are at ease, we aren't learning, and if we aren't learning, we aren't leading.

Why the best leaders know how to be vulnerable

This is what I learned from FBI training: Understanding our fears gives us the confidence to move forward. Courage is the product of our vulnerability, not our strengths. The possibility of greatness opens up when we prepare to move through our fears; in other words, allow ourselves to be vulnerable.
