Broncos, WellPower join youth experiencing homelessness at Urban Peak

"So many people look up to the players and the Broncos organization as pillars of the community," WellPower's Melissa Zotara said, "so just to have some players here to be with the youth ... I think means so much to the youth, to be here and know that an organization like the Broncos is in their corner and on their side."

Chestnut's Lighthouse Institute Receives National Recognition

For its annual conference, the American Psychiatric Association (APA) produced a video that details a current LI research project. The experiment follows adults recently released from the Cook County, IL jail who live with opioid use disorder. The study aims to learn whether people are more likely to achieve and stay in recovery if they have periodic recovery check-ups, much like check-ups a person would have for any chronic illness. An estimated 14,000 attended the conference in San Francisco, where the video was shown. View the video and learn more about the LI study here.

4 Principles to Guide Your Digital Health Strategy

Digital health strategy has taken on greater importance as providers work to meet rising consumer expectations. Yet even after the many digital front-door improvements health care organizations made during the pandemic to make it easier for consumers to access and schedule care, it appears more work needs to be done. That's a key finding from a recent Experian Health survey of more than 1,200 providers and consumers.
